BE VERY CAREFUL in evaluating claims of parties who claim either final wisdom or divine revelation about Y2K. Christians who make specific predictions connecting current events to Bible prophecy place the credibility of the Gospel at risk. Jesus made it clear that there are some things we can know, and some things we can't. He commands us not to speculate about those events which He has kept hidden. Remember Paul's admonition that we focus on "rejoicing in hope" rather than welcoming disaster.

CHRISTIANS MAY FOLLOW Christ in different ways - some are Baptist, others Pentecostal, some are Wesleyan and others Calvinist. Similarly, Christians may interpret and respond to the Year 2000 issue differently. There is no monolithic "right" Christian position on Y2K. We take no position on the merits of "relocation." But we urge all concerned Christians to make a serious effort to educate themselves about Y2K. You wouldn't interpret all of Scripture by reading a single chapter of the Bible. You shouldn't draw conclusions about Y2K outcomes based upon a single story or web site - including this one.

WE DISAGREE with those who advocate citizens' arming themselves. Y2K presents many problems, but guns won't solve any of them. It is our position that Jesus was very clear in his teachings about non-violence (Matthew 5:39).

ONE THING IS CERTAIN: Whatever happens on Jan. 1, 2000 won't be

This site is devoted to the assessment, enlightenment and preparation for possible short-term *global economic collapse

From the convergence of various economic cycles, coinciding with effects caused by the "year 2000 computer bug," it can be demonstrated that severe worldwide downturn is imminent. While it is tempting to dismiss it as "millennial madness," there is firm evidence and consensus that such a calamity has already begun, will continue to escalate in 1999 and total in 2000 .

Never before in history have we been able to predict the date of a catastrophe...until now. Most convincing is the "millennium computer glitch" (or Y2K). Most have heard of it, but there is widespread lack of concern and knowledge of the magnitude of this problem. The potential consequences are far more serious than commonly believed. It is an integral, monumental built-in time bomb that pervades most computers and all of society's systems. What is the millennium bug and how did we get into this mess? Click here to find out.

Many still think it'll be "taken care of," and don't yet realize this seemingly trivial matter will soon radically alter our current way of life. The present complacency is the calm before the storm. Or mass denial. This will change is just starting to be compiled."

Based on respondents who have revised their year 2000 estimates to include the desktop and networking software, it now looks as if the cost of bringing distributed computing into compliance will be nearly half the cost of fixing mainframe systems. Even after completing an inventory of systems, a major difficulty is projecting the cost of upgrades, Rubin says.

Meanwhile, the federal government's year 2000 cost estimate has grown from $2.3 billion in February to $2.8 billion in May to $3.8 billion in August and $3.9 billion this month. Sally Katzen, an Office of Management and Budget administrator who is the federal government's top year 2000 official, says she "wouldn't be surprised if it reaches $5 billion." She had previously projected the cost would be between $2 billion and $5 billion.

What worries Katzen is testing. There are still many unknowns, she says, such as how much testing will be required, how many agencies will have to be involved, and what protocols will be used. But, she adds, federal agencies haven't had trouble accurately estimating year 2000 costs in desktop and network environments.

The browser window also shows a sidebar with links for "InformationWeek 500 Software Downloads", "Free E-mail Sign Up Now", and "Services" including "Contact Us", "IW Daily", "Subscriptions", "Online Store", "Media Kit/Ed.
